Monthly Commentary

The Delta variant of Covid-19 continues to wreak havoc. Microbiologist and Professor of Public Health and Microbiology at the University of Cambridge, Sharon Peacock, recently called it the “fittest and fastest variant yet”. Early signs are showing that while vaccination remains the best option to prevent death, it is no guarantee against infection. In Singapore, three quarters of the Coronavirus cases were among the vaccinated, although none were seriously ill. On the other hand, in Israel, 60% of the current hospitalised Covid patients had already been vaccinated.

In May, China said couples can have up to three children, rather than the previous restriction of two children per family. This change is intended to have broader, long-term implications for the country's shrinking work force. China is driving a bid to lower families' living costs by rolling out regulatory oversight in the private education industry. Firms teaching school subjects are also banned from making profits, raising capital, or going public. Hong Kong and New York listed Chinese private education companies have already seen their share prices tumbling in the last week of July.

In the US, Joe Biden drove the vaccination of 60% of the American population in his first six months in office while passing a $1.9 trillion COVID-19 relief bill. The Centre for Disease Control (CDC), who previously said fully vaccinated Americans could ditch their masks in most settings, backtracked, recommending the re-imposition of face masks in indoor settings. Vaccination is likely to become widely accepted, but it looks like Covid is here to stay.

South Africans are known for their resilience and ability to rally in the face of difficult circumstances and July 2021 proved no exception. After an initial shock about the riots and looting which broke out, largely in Gauteng and Kwa-Zulu Natal, citizens quickly mobilised to protect communities from criminal elements. Sasria, the only insurer in the country which provides insurance cover against riots and civil unrest noted: this was the worst case of unrest seen since the 1976 riots and the true damages are only likely to be reflected in a few months when all claims have been submitted. The FTSE/JSE SWIX Index rose 1.6%, Industrials were up 1.0% and Financials decreased by 1.4%. The JSE All Bond Index increased 0.8%, while the rand depreciated by 2.5% relative to the US dollar.
